An Analysis of the Dress Notions of the Summer Capital.

What Distinguishes the Summer Girl of the Cottages from the Summer Girl Elsewhere-The Blazer and the Suspender.

[COPTRIGHT, 1802.] What distinguishes dress at Newport is its absolute freshness and the charm of artistic taste and summer simplicity. There's a curious homogeneity about the cottagers, though they come from every part of the country, and there's a consistent repulsion of discordant elements that would change the character of the seaside capitals. The quiet of the place drives out people who can't find life endurable without a touch of Coney Island liveliness. The streets are not watered on Sundays and the clouds of dust preserve Bellevue avenue from the Sabbath raid of excursionists. The hotel business is unimportant as compared with that of other resorts of any pretentiousness; old Newport, irregular and dingy, is interesting, but not thrilling, and new Newport-the Newport of the cottagers-is withdrawn behind the bulwarks of gate lodges and bowered in

So it comes that the summer girl is here sui generis; the outside barbarian may not look upon her, and serene and secure in her exclusiveness she walks or she lounges on great shady verandas behind huge blue and vellow and crimson flower jars, and screened by woven reed or bambee curtains, in organdie or taffeta or gingham frocks of such perfect simplicity as is seldom attempted elsewhere. Mary Ann in the tenements would scorn them utterly until she was told what such beautiful plainness costs its beautiful possessors. Never a wrinkle or a crease mars the dainty freshness of her quaint old-time lawn or the sheen of her thin change-able silk with its stiff, last century pattern. The secret of eternal youth, lost everywhere else on earth, is possessed by the Newport girl's trim skirt with the narrowest ribbon ruche at the foot and her "baby" waist with its lace yoke and broad girdle. Dust and stain refuse to touch it, and if the rain beats down out of heaven in some mysterious way the drops part above the summer maiden's head and leave her radiant and dry. She is not a miracle worker, but she mostly has a maid.

They who see much of Newport see much of blue. Turquois blue gleams out from behind blossoming honeysuckle vines on cottage piazzas; deep rich marine blue walks the beaches and the avenue in blazer suits over white fronts recklessly beruffled. A new and strange gray blue goes on daisy and wild rose picnics, in dimity and chambrey and all manner of linens, feather stitched with white cord in circles and great wheels.

Pink keeps blue company. Pink organdies flutter about at garden parties like fluffs of rosy cloud; pink batistes embroidered in Russian colors promenade the Casino. Pink ginghams trimmed with eeru laces and yards upon vards of ribbon curl up in great beach chairs or walk under black or cream colored lace parasol pavilions.

Red outdares pink and blue. Red shadow silks sweep over the lawns, like poppies flowing in the wind. serges rise and fall with the motion of every yacht that dances into or out of harbor. They have Eton jackets with deep frilled collars of white surah and broad belts of the same material.

paradisical cottages on the water side of Bellevue avenue was the scene of the play. The wind was coming in strong from the Atlantic and tossing soap bubbles of foam over the cliffs to break on the thorns of the rose hedges. The balls went wild but the rather stiff and heavy marseilles, revived a couple of seasons ago for waistcoats and the material above all other known cottons for seaside use, behaved itself, like its merry wearers, to perfection.

One pretty white suit flecked with little dashes of scarlet was worth particular attention. It had a short bell skirt and one of this season's funny little abbreviated waiters' jackets opening over a scarlet silk blouse of just the shade of color the marseilles was splashed with. It had a broad-brimmed hat of marsellles also, with no trimming whatever but a few upright loops of

A big leghorn hat bent in fantastic shape and garlanded with lilies, veiled with silver mull, will be set upon the head and shielded, so far as such an airy nothing can make pretense of shielding, by the tangle of gauze, floating ribbons and flowers which is dignified this summer by the name of a parasol.

You will not find a better place than Newport for the study of the blazer. It is blue; dark blue, light blue, dull blue, bright blue, plain blue and polka dot ted. It is red; repeat the same formula It is black, striped with white and checked. It is cream colored, with hair line stripes of any color the fancy pleases. Perhaps it is most nearly soul satisfying on a pretty girl in white flannel, and, when it is itself white flannel, striped with navy blue.

With the blazer there seems to belong a white taffeta washing parasol. could not say what suggests the alliance, but try it any morning at eleven on the beach or under the shade of the great lindens along the avenue and you will find that it exists and that the parasol lives up to its agreement by having a short, natural wood club handle. It thus proclaims itself a thing of use, with beauty incidental. When the blazer comes off there are revealed suspenders. It is astonish-

Origin of Drinking Healths.
